Are you obsessed with the latest developments in skincare and skin treatments? Do you have the skills you need to deliver amazing customer service? If that sounds like you, then you could thrive as an esthetician – a beauty professional who specializes in offering skin treatments and recommendations to their clients. Skincare is a growing field, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics can back that up. It predicts job growth of roughly 17% for estheticians over the coming decade – that’s much faster than average! What’s more, estheticians can earn a median average of $37,300 per year, which is pretty good for a job that doesn’t ask you to sink your savings into a college education. But even with that amazing level of growth in the industry, esthetician jobs can be hard to get. Ultimately, you’re asking an employer to let you take responsibility for their clients’ skin health and beauty – the results are highly visible, and they want to be sure you have the skills it takes to represent them well. Spas and salons can afford to be selective when they hire estheticians, which means it’s on you to prove that they should choose you. Fortunately, we’re here to help! We’ve compiled some example resume sections, insider tips on the art of resume-writing, and helpful hints on how to build a strong resume even with limited experience. Keep reading, and your first esthetician resume will get you hired in no time!Note: Leverage AI to level-up your resume - Try our AI Resume Builder What is an Esthetician? Estheticians, as we’ve explained, specialize in offering skin treatments and skincare advice to their customers. That could mean anything from carrying out chemical peels to giving full-blown makeovers – it’s a specialized role, but within that role, you need to be prepared for a lot of variety. They also need to deliver great customer service on behalf of their workplace, so your communication and problem-solving skills will need to be top-tier. Estheticians can be found working in a variety of work environments, including: Salons Beauty spas Health spas Medical offices To work as an esthetician, you will need to be appropriately qualified. Don’t worry, you won’t have to spend four years in college – you’ll just need to complete a state-approved cosmetology or esthetician program. You’ll then need to pass a state exam in order to receive your esthetician’s license, which you will need in order to work. The program you complete will give you a grounding in the hard skills you’ll need as an esthetician. But don’t forget your soft skills! Customer service, communication, organization, attention to detail, and industry knowledge are all vital in this line of work. How to Write an Esthetician Resume If you’re hoping to build a career as an esthetician, but you don’t have any experience, your resume needs to tell hiring managers two critical things. The first is that you are qualified to carry out the role – in this case, that means that you have the qualifications and the license that you need. The second is that you have the skills to help you do well. Estheticians need both skills and qualifications in order to be considered for work. This means that your resume should focus equally on both areas. When you have more experience as an esthetician, you can balance out your skills and qualifications with a more in-depth experience section, too. But in the immediate term, keep in mind that there are other ways to build experience than finding a relevant job! Internships and volunteer experience can be featured on your resume, as long as they’re relevant to the role you want. You can also cite any previous, less relevant jobs you’ve held, as they may have required you to use skills that are also important for an esthetician. In general, an esthetician resume written by someone with limited relevant work experience should contain the following: A summary Your education, including your qualifications and licenses Your skills Any experience you have The Best Format for an Esthetician Resume When choosing your professionally-designed esthetician resume template from our selection, remember that your resume’s format can steer hiring managers to the strongest areas of your resume. You should select a format that will draw attention to your strengths and minimize any weaker points. As an esthetician, your resume should strike a good balance between all sections. You should try to choose a template that offers that same balance visually. If anything is minimized by your resume format, it should be your experience section – at least until you have more relevant work experience behind you. Keep in mind that many companies use an applicant tracking system (or ATS) to sift through candidates’ resumes. This can help companies speed up the hiring process, but it also means that if your resume doesn’t get past the ATS software, it may never be seen by a person. ATS software usually looks for keywords drawn from the job description, so make sure you refer to the job description as you write your resume! ATS software can also be thrown off by complicated resume formatting. But don’t worry – all of VisualCV’s resume templates are designed to get through ATS software. That means you can focus on the content of your resume, and leave the formatting to us. 3 Esthetician Resume Examples Most resumes begin with a summary – a concise description of your best attributes. It’s one of the first things a recruiter will see about you, so it’s worth taking the time to get it right! And remember, your summary needs to reflect the demands of the job, so you can’t use a generic summary for every application. Summaries are especially useful when applying for entry-level roles. That’s because they let you draw attention to your skills and qualifications right away, even when you don’t have much experience. When you have more experience behind you, you can rework your summary so it calls attention to that, instead. Do: Qualified and licensed esthetician with two years’ prior experience as a make-up artist. Customer-focused and highly organized, with a passion for changing lives through skincare. Esthetician licensed in the state of Texas. Past experience as a salon receptionist, hoping to transition into a career in beauty. Driven, motivated and customer-oriented, with high levels of personal organization. Licensed esthetician with previous work experience as a sales representative. Committed to delivering great customer service through clear communication and in-depth knowledge of the industry. Your summary needs to be short, clear and direct, focusing on what you can deliver in the role you want. It should tell a hiring manager why you meet the requirements for the job, and it shouldn’t be too wordy or personal. You can explain why you want the job in your cover letter – but you shouldn’t do that here. Remember, not all recruiters agree that you need a summary on your resume. If you’re having a hard time getting it right, you should be able to leave it out! Don’t: After three years as a make-up artist, I have developed a passion for the beauty industry and would love to build a more sustainable career. That’s why I retrained as an esthetician! I am passionate about skincare and skin health, and can’t wait to begin this new chapter of my life. Do You Need a Resume Objective? We’ve covered summaries in depth – but what about your resume objective? Believe it or not, there is a difference between the two. Your summary should be a short description of the qualities that make you right for the job. Your objective should be a one-sentence statement about your planned career trajectory in the future. Objectives are most common when applying for entry-level roles; more senior roles don’t usually need them. But because you’re applying for a job in a field where you have no prior experience, you should consider including an objective. It’s a way to show hiring managers that you take this job seriously as a step on your long-term career journey. Esthetician Resume Objective Example: Aspiring esthetician looking to build a career in the beauty industry. How to Describe Your Experience on Your Esthetician Resume When you don’t have much relevant experience, it can be daunting to complete this section of your resume – but remember that not all experience involves paid work! If you’ve volunteered or interned in the past, that experience could help you strengthen your resume. This is particularly true if your experience is relevant to the job you want. Describe Your Experience Effectively Your experience section needs to show what you accomplished in your previous roles. Recruiters want to see proof that you were able to get results in the past. This will give them confidence that you can achieve similar things again in the future. Wherever possible, you should point out specific results you achieved in former roles. If you were able to boost profits by a certain percentage, for example, that’s an obvious benefit that you can prove you delivered. But positive outcomes without a numerical value – such as satisfied customers or praise from a manager – are also great to include. Do: Spa Receptionist, Blue Lagoon Spa | 2019 Greeted and welcomed customers on arrival at the spa, taking coats and offering beverages to enhance their experience Entered all customer bookings into the spa’s booking system, ensuring a clear and orderly schedule for all spa employees Took responsibility for deliveries, inventory management, answering phone calls, and a wide range of other logistical duties within the spa How Not to Describe Your Experience Don’t just write a straightforward list of the tasks you completed in former jobs! Without any context, that won’t tell hiring managers anything new or useful about you. Remember, the fact that you did the job in the first place isn’t the point; you need to prove that you could do your job effectively. Don’t: Spa Receptionist, Blue Lagoon Spa | 2019 Greeted customers Placed customer bookings Handled spa logistics How to List Skills on Your Esthetician Resume When listing skills on your resume, pay careful attention to the job description for the role you want. It will typically contain a list of the skills you’ll need to demonstrate. But remember that not every useful skill will be listed on every job description – so it’s useful to take the initiative and the time to research helpful esthetician skills. For general information about skills on your resume, check out our resume skills guide here! Esthetician Hard SkillsEsthetician Soft SkillsMake-up applicationCustomer ServiceSkin analysisOrganizationPL hair removalProblem-solvingChemical peel applicationTeamworkFacial massageFlexibilityPoint-of-sale useCommunicationPhysical enduranceMulti-taskingHealth and safety awarenessInitiative Professional Certifications for Estheticians Certifications show recruiters that you take your professional development as seriously as your work, and that you’re willing to take the initiative to pursue both. They’re also great proof of your skills, which can be extra useful when you don’t have much relevant work experience. If you’re able to, we always recommend pursuing a certification in your field. To work as an esthetician, you’ll need to complete a relevant course – we recommend doing some research into courses available in your area – as well as a licensing exam. Beyond that point, it’s important to remember that the industry is always progressing as new treatments are developed. Keep on top of industry news, so you’re aware of your options when it comes to training in new procedures. The Most Important Soft Skills for Your Esthetician Resume While working as an esthetician will require you to make extensive use of your hard skills, that doesn’t mean you should neglect your soft skills! They can give you a real advantage in completing your day-to-day tasks. And if a role is particularly competitive, having the right soft skills could give you an advantage when you apply. Here are some of the most important soft skills to include on your esthetician resume! Customer Service As an esthetician, you’ll find yourself facing a lot of direct customer contact. You’ll need to make customers feel welcome in your workplace, put them at ease during their treatment, and build a bond with them so they’ll want to come back and see you again. If customer service isn’t your forte, this may not be the role for you! Organization Your work as an esthetician will be pretty self-directed – which means you will need to be as organized as possible to deliver the best experience for your customers. This skill will also help you to be taken seriously by your colleagues at work. Problem-Solving A salon can be a chaotic work environment, despite the superficial air of calm! You may need to deal with staff shortages, unhappy customers, or equipment failures – and ideally, you’ll need to do it without giving your customers cause to worry. A knack for problem-solving will take you a long way, as a result. What should I include in my objective statement on an esthetician resume with no experience? Your objective statement should highlight your passion for skincare, your relevant training or certifications, and your eagerness to start your career in esthetics. For example: "Dedicated and newly certified Esthetician with a passion for skincare and beauty. Eager to apply my training in facials, waxing, and skin analysis to provide exceptional client care at [Spa/Salon Name] while continuing to learn and grow in the field." How can I highlight relevant skills on an esthetician resume if I have no experience? If you have no experience, focus on your training, certifications, and any hands-on practice you’ve completed during your education. Highlight your knowledge of skincare treatments, product application, and client care. Emphasize your strong communication skills, attention to detail, and ability to create a relaxing and welcoming environment for clients. Should I include volunteer work on my esthetician resume? Yes, including volunteer work is valuable, especially if it involved skincare or beauty-related activities. For example, if you volunteered at a community event providing skincare tips or assisted in a beauty-related charity event, it would demonstrate your commitment to the field. Volunteer experiences that show your ability to interact with clients and provide skincare advice can strengthen your resume. How can I demonstrate my understanding of esthetician duties on my resume? To demonstrate your understanding of esthetician duties on your resume, include details about your training in skincare treatments, such as facials, waxing, and makeup application. Mention any specific skincare techniques you’ve learned, such as chemical peels, microdermabrasion, or eyebrow shaping. Highlight your knowledge of skincare products, your ability to assess skin types, and your understanding of proper sanitation and safety protocols in a spa or salon setting. What should I include in the education section of my esthetician resume? Include your esthetician certification from a recognized cosmetology or esthetics school. If you’ve completed any specialized courses or certifications, such as in microdermabrasion, chemical peels, or makeup artistry, be sure to include those as well. Mention any workshops, seminars, or continuing education that provided you with practical knowledge in esthetics. Can I include non-esthetician work experience on my resume? Yes, non-esthetician work experience can be valuable, especially if it demonstrates skills such as customer service, communication, or attention to detail. For example, roles in retail, hospitality, or any position that required you to interact with customers, manage appointments, or work in a team can provide relevant experience for an esthetician position. How do I format an esthetician resume with no experience? Use a clean and professional format with sections for your objective, skills, education, and any relevant experience. Start with a strong objective statement that outlines your enthusiasm for the role. Then, list your relevant skills and any training, including practical work completed during your certification program. Highlight any certifications, training, or volunteer work that supports your qualifications. How important is a cover letter when applying for an esthetician position with no experience? A cover letter is very important as it allows you to explain your passion for skincare and why you’re a great fit for the job, even with no direct experience. Use the cover letter to highlight your training, any relevant projects or coursework, and your commitment to providing excellent client care. Tailoring your cover letter to the specific spa or salon and the services they offer can help make a strong impression. How can I make my esthetician resume stand out with no experience? To make your resume stand out, focus on your passion for skincare, your training, and any hands-on experience you’ve gained during your certification program. Highlight your knowledge of skincare products, your ability to perform basic treatments, and your commitment to maintaining a professional and clean work environment. Tailoring your resume to the specific needs of the spa or salon can also help you differentiate yourself from other candidates. Esthetician Salaries Because entry-level esthetician roles don’t require a college education, salaries tend to be on the lower side. The US Bureau of Labor Statistics reports a median average salary of $37,300 per year (or $17.93 per hour) for estheticians. But remember, if you deliver great customer service as an esthetician, you may be able to benefit from customer tips. This additional income can really boost your salary over time! You should also keep in mind that, while entry-level esthetician roles can be pretty low-paid, you may be able to negotiate for better salaries as you build more experience. It’s important to manage your expectations in the early stages of your career, but that doesn’t mean you should be willing to settle forever. Final Thoughts Working as an esthetician can allow you to translate a passion into a career. It can also give you a way to change people’s lives, by giving them the confidence to face down the world. It can be incredibly rewarding work – so why not give it a try? If your resume isn’t standing out, a VisualCV Pro membership can help you to shine. Pro membership gives you the tools to customize every facet of your resume, and allows you to contact resume experts who can help you strengthen your application. Give your resume a makeover today! As an entry-level esthetician, you consult with clients and dole out appropriate self-maintenance plans and treatments. You may work closely with a more experienced esthetician to ensure that each client walks away with optimal results. But how can you make your resume as beautiful as your last manicure? What skills and qualifying experiences do recruiters want? Which resume template will best display those skills? Don’t fret! We’ve helped countless professionals like you and have put together three entry-level esthetician resume examples, handy tips, and an AI cover letter generator to get you on the way to something beautiful, or download as PDF! Setting out as an esthetician and feeling like a square peg in a round hole? We’ve been there! However, let not your limited experience be a roadblock on your journey to career greatness. Whether from a stint as a spa assistant, a college project, or even a seminar you attended, mastery of job-specific software or tools could be your ace in the hole. Sure, a brief skills section is a no-brainer for an entry-level esthetician resume. But having your work history section show these tools in action? Now that’s a stroke of genius that puts together a compelling story about your resourcefulness and credibility—catnip for recruiters, even if you’re just stepping onto the scene, or download as PDF! Your skills are the building blocks for your new career. Recruiters want to easily skim over your technical abilities and compare them against the job’s needs. That means you should be comparing your skills list with those in the job description! Look for keywords like "Manicures/Pedicures" or "Treatment Planning" that you can match in your skills section. List programs and tools by name. Keep your list as relevant to the job as possible. That means getting specific, and we recommend honing your skills to show your unique approach to the esthetician role! Don't say "communication" when you can specify that you're great at listening to clients' needs. EminenceMindBodyGlowAI Client ConsultationMaintenancePlansManicures/PedicuresOvatuLightStimDarsonvalSample entry-level esthetician work experience bullet pointsYour job skills are amazing, but they're more like tools of the trade, and recruiters need examples of how you've used them. Did you benefit your last employer by improving efficiency? Recruiters want to see solid examples of your positive impact on other estheticians and clients. Did you improve general practices by suggesting a new client feedback system? How did your display ideas help uplift limited-time products? And don't forget the numbers that go with those success stories! Recruiters want quantifiable data that measures your impact. Consider satisfaction percentages, client return rates, and any other positive star ratings or reviews substantiating your contributions as an entry-level esthetician. Here are some samples: Attended to 16+ clients with strained facial muscles and reduced their pain by 87% within two sessions Promoted Eminence and SkinCeuticals products to record a 36% surge in sale-through rates Streamlined customer scheduling via Meevo and increased weekly bookings by 77% while maintaining 0 instances of double-booking Administered effective wrinkle and acne treatments using LightStim, boosting customer satisfaction ratings by 46% Maintained customer-friendly environment, earning a personal feedback rating of 4.8/5.0 stars Keep it short and sleek! Aim for a one-page resume. Recruiters can only spend a few seconds on average reviewing your resume. Keep it short, streamline anything you can, and leave them eager for more! Bulk up your resume with internships! If you're struggling to fill the page with qualifying experiences, think back to all your internships you've had. Did you shadow an esthetician or stylist in the past for a school project? If it relates to your current goals and strengthens your capabilities, list it! Choose your writing tone deliberately! Revisit the job description for this one and pull up the company website, too. Look up what it takes for you to understand the brand and company culture. Then, write your resume with a tone that fits the style of the work environment as if you'd been there doing out skin care treatments all along! Use references if needed! If you step back to look at your resume and still crave some more reinforcements, call upon your references! If you have any memorable professors, previous coworkers, or former employers who know how ambitious and creative you are, ask them for professional letters of recommendation and attach them to your resume. Pick an awesome-looking layout! Any of our three entry-level esthetician resume templates would look great on you! Once you try them, pick the one that plays up your best features, just like you'd pick the most suitable products to recommend to a client. A side column is ideal if you include internships, volunteer initiatives, or academic awards to boost your credibility. What about cover letters? Cover letters are a great place for an entry-level applicant to expand on their existing work experiences and how they translate into qualifications as an esthetician. They're also great for experience points that are good, but a little too "clunky" to present on your resume. What if I've worked unrelated jobs for years? You can still leverage those work experiences to your advantage! Not every entry-level esthetician is fresh out of school. If you have experience in a hair or nail salon, you'll naturally find some overlapping skills. But you can still find translatable organizational and interpersonal skills in most any profession. Do I have to fill the resume page? No, you don't need to fill your whole resume page, especially for an entry-level. Present your top-quality information as beautifully as possible while keeping things readable and sleek. An esthetician is a professional expert in skin care and beauty treatments, dedicated to enhancing an individual's appearance through various services like facials, exfoliation, body wraps, and waxing. They are custodians of skin health, offering personalized advice and treatment plans to help clients achieve and maintain vibrant, healthy-looking skin. For a new esthetician with no experience, the resume becomes a critical tool to highlight their educational background, licensure, knowledge of esthetics, and any relevant skills or volunteer work. Given the absence of professional experience, the resume should focus on academic achievements, and hands-on experience gained during training. Also, it should contain knowledge of esthetic principles and techniques, familiarity with sanitation protocols, any customer service experience, and a strong understanding of product ingredients. A well-crafted, no-experience esthetician resume opens doors by compensating for the lack of professional history with a showcase of enthusiasm, readiness to contribute from day one, and an education that aligns with the needs of potential employers in the beauty and wellness industry.
